Violations

Provide alternative text for images

10

Severity: 10

All images within a page must be given an alternate text equivalent. Text equivalents for non-text elements communicate the meaning of images to users who cannot perceive the image such as users of screen readers. Proper equivalents provide text which contributes the same level of understanding to the content of the page as the image itself. In instances where the image does not contribute to the understanding of the content and is purely decorative, it needs to be marked in a way to indicate its purely decorative purpose.

Ensure links or controls that open new windows or frames do not open without a warning

Severity: 6

Developers should avoid creating links or other controls opening new windows without either indicating that fact to users or allowing them to control the focus change. Exceptions are made if the new window comes in the form of a dialog, one that is either predictable by its context (such as a "Print this page" link that triggers the browser's Print dialog), or is implemented in an accessible manner (such as a "Delete" image link that triggers a simple JavaScript alert with an "Are you sure you want to delete this?" prompt).

Ensure embedded elements and canvas elements provide a meaningful text equivalent 6

Severity: 6

Embedded objects, particularly those which embed audio in a page, require text equivalents to be associated with the embedded file. For example, if a piece of audio is embedded in a page, the page author should provide a transcript of that audio.

Ensure link text is meaningful within context

Severity: 6

It is important for users to be able to discern the purpose of all links. Meaningful link text should not be overly general and should clearly describe the content to be found or action to be performed by the link. For example, do not use generic text such as "click here", "read more", etc. unless the purpose of the link can be determined by meaning in the surrounding content. When a link's purpose can not be determined users may be required to follow the link to determine its purpose. Returning to a previous location can often be more difficult for users with disabilities using assistive technology. Thus, developers must ensure that a link's purpose is clear.

Ensure ARIA regions, landmarks and HTML sections are identifiable

Severity: 3

When ARIA regions, landmarks or HTML5 section elements are provided, users must be able to distinguish them from other regions, landmarks or sections in the page, particularly when two or more instances of the same type are used. When such an element does not provide a descriptive label to clearly identify itself, users of screen readers may have trouble locating the correct section or understanding its purpose.
